NTCC Honors is the only community college honors program in the nation to have presented at every meeting of the National Collegiate Honors Council since 2008. In 2012, with competition from the State University of New York, the University of Alabama, the Colorado School of Mines, and universities throughout the nation, NTCC still placed four presenters at the Boston meeting. Jacob Brantley, left, examined research at three great medical mainstays—the Mayo, Johns Hopkins and the Texas Medical Center. He presented a provocative report on the “perils of progress.” Stephani Calderon, below, also inspired a vigorous response with her argument that the U.S. is plunging toward sovereign default, and a “scarlet (debt to GDP) number.” (Continued on p. 2)

A Five-Year Tradition: Cypress Bank provides Ricky Huitema with a MacBook

Real rewards and wide-open access historically have made Texas a dynamic place.

In Northeast Texas, Cypress Bank’s gifts of laptops to NTCC honors has been of great benefit for rising scholars, and a powerful evocation of this Texas tradition. Previous Cypress Bank Scholars at NTCC Honors such as Shelby Parker, the only NTCC student in history to have won a Caldwell and a Boe Award, and Jacob Brantley, above, have had the best and newest machines to assist their winning projects. This year’s Cypress Bank Scholar, Ricky Huitema, has continued in this tradition. Huitema, a $400 winner of the 2012 Northeast Texas Poetry competition, had a perfect GPA in his first semester.

We are indebted to Cypress Bank leaders such as Gary Bicknell, and B. Gooding who have made these awards possible.

Friends of NTCC Honors

(continued from p.1). Emily Parker’s poster at the NCHC (right) charted the signs of declining prejudice, in three areas once renowned for distinctive racial problems. Jesse Rivera (right), focused on the ironic responses of Indian holdouts to the wars that deprived them of their homelands.

National prizes result from such prestigious venues. Since 2010 among colleges under 10,000, NTCC ranks tied for first in the nation in the number (4) of higher-level prizes in the All-USA-Coca Cola contest! Three of our 4 NTCC winners presented at the NCHC.

An Anonymous Donor provided $500 for the four NTCC Scholars who presented work at the NCHC in Boston. The students had a wonderful time traipsing through Boston, with extra dollars on a perfect fall day.

NTCC Honors remains indebted to Elliott Motors, and NTCC alumnus, Michael Whitney (above) for gifts enabling five years of poetry contests. The awards have imbued some of our most ambitious students with an appreciation of words, and meanings, but also a stronger sense of association to Northeast Texas as a unique region of the nation.

Dr. Charles Florio, former NTCC President, has always had a special impact on NTCC Honors, and he still provides monetary support.

Honors Alumni: Where Are They Now?

Kristin Ellermann, far left, a member of our first, 2007 class of Presidential Scholars, made the Peace Corps and is based in Akhlatsikhe, Georgia, near Turkey. Ellermann received her B.A from Southwestern U, and is an accomplished multi-linguist, and writer. To the lower left, Lisa Lageschaar, continued in the trajectory she established at NTCC in her final year, obtaining a perfect 4.0 GPA at Tarleton State. She is bound for Grad school like Zachary Richardson, now at UNT, right. Richardson is part of UNT’s impressive Digital Products Unit.

Fall Happenings

Thanks to the Travel Reward Fund established by Dr. Jim and Paula Archer, NTCC Honors enjoyed another lavish trip to Dallas/Fort Worth. Professors Hearron, Rangel, Weinbrenner, and Yox, plus 25 honors students, some of which are shown above, toured the Fort Worth Zoo, the Kimbell, and the Botanical Garden. They saw A. Christie’s Black Coffee.

Samantha Trickey, Jessica Salaverria, Chelsea Applegate, and Matthew Jordan, below, pioneered a new NTCC Honors activity, penning a grant proposal for NTCC’s Caddo collection that thus far has netted $1,125!

(Top) Noah Griffin, Andrea Wells, Alisha Richardson, and Andrew Austin represented our film and prospects at the Webb meeting in Huntsville.

(2nd from Top) S. Calderon, J. Brantley, Ricky Huitema, and Matthew Jordan aired on K-Lake, 14 December.

NTCC Honors completes Caldwell Finalist

We don’t know the results of the state Caldwell contest yet, but it is a good sign that the State Webb Society for Texas History has been encouraging access to the 2012 film of NTCC Honors: Modern Icarus, The Story of Morris Sheppard. Type <Morris Sheppard> to view the film on Youtube.

Andrew Austin (left) is the film’s producer. In the film, he recreated an explosion, adjusted sound disparities, and incorporated musical tracks. He was a tireless persuader. The film is about NE Texas’s most influential and forgotten political leader.

A Message From the Honors Director

The rising visibility of NTCC Honors is manifest in my own election as President Elect of the Great Plains Honors Council this past October. I will be replacing Dr. Karl Petruso of UT Arlington in November. Honors Directors throughout the region, from Nebraska to Texas, are recognizing that NTCC Honors has had some remarkable student winners, munificent benefactors, a winsome faculty, and creative administrative support.

Special thanks to Honors Professor Chuck Hamilton, left in center, whose professional film rig, and willingness to come to Jefferson helped our film project immensely. Dr. Mary Hearron has been an invaluable trip leader and letter-writer for national competitions. Dr. M. Weinbrenners’ leadership of Phi Theta Kappa is another amazing NTCC story.

Cast of Modern Icarus

Academic Excellence

Presidential Scholar, Noah Griffin, led all in the Biotex Honors Seminar in the Fall of 2012, while PS Jacob Brantley, compiled the best overall record for students in Humusic Seminar. Other Presidential Scholars with exceptional records in the H seminars were Stephani Calderon, Ricky Huitema, Stephen Milburn, and Alisha Richardson.
